noon; southerly winds, becoming westerly.

The intense heat of the past ten days n the central valleys, due in part to the stagnation of the atmosphere, has been broken by the forward movement of the trough of low pressure from Kansas to the lake regions and by the advance of the high pressure area from the north Pacific coast to Colorado. A fall in temperature of twenty degrees in twenty-four hours has been reported from Sloux City and Concordia. The area indicating the fall in temperature has advanced to the 80 h meridian and covers the whole country from that meridian to the Rocky moun-tairs, except northern Louisiana, extreme northeastern Texas, Georgia and South Carolina, where the temperature has risen two degrees. It is probable that this cooler weather will reach the lower lake region this afternoon and the Atlantic states Sunday afternoon, giving cooler

Weather conditions—The pressure is high in the Saint Lawrence valley and off the Florida coast. The high pressure area has moved from Idaho to northern Colorado, increasing in magnitude, a pressure of 30.26 inches being reported from Denver. A trough of low pressure extends from Texas to Lake Superior and is moving slowly eastward. Rain has fallen in this trough, the middle slope, the lower Mississippi valley, the south Atlantic states and in New England.

How He Saved the School Funds.

One of the most striking episodes in the life of Senator Harris was his taking possession of $700,000 in gold belonging to the school fund of Tennessee. Many stories have been told about this incident, but the following account was related by Senator Harris when he was chairman of the District committee to Mr. Chas. Moore, the present clerk of the committee.

Senator Harris said that in 1862, when Nashville was about to fall into the hands of the federal troops, the state bank of Tennessee had in its vaults something more than $700,000 in gold and silver coin. beside valuable securities. Two private banks, the Unior and Flanters', also held considerable amounts of money. Senator Harris, at that time governor of Tennessee, was determined that this money should not fall into the hards of the enemy. He persuaded the officers of the state bank, which acted as the fiscal agent of the state, to remove the bank's assets to a point of secfety within the confederate lines. The officers of the private banks, however, were unwilling to make the change and he governor's arguments were unavailing. He thereupon returned to his office and sent to each bank a note in which he said something like this:

"No doubt you can manage the affairs of your bank better than I can, and I do not desire to undertake the conduct of your business. However, I desire to inform you that unless you give me your assurance that within three hours that you will remove your cash and securities to a point of safety within the confederate lines, 1 shall be under the necessity of appointing a receiver to take immediate possession of your bank, and such receiver will be accompanied by a file of soldiers to enforce

Before the three hours had expired a favorable answer was received from the two private banks. The governor joined the staff of the commanding general of the confederate army as a volunteer aid. He obtained a sufficient guard of soldiers to protect the bank moneys and he moved the protect the bank moneys and he moved the assets from one place to another. He formed the habit of going each week to the place where the bank was temporarily located and personally counting the cash. In time, he said, he became familiar with every bag of coin and its contents. One day the cashier of the bank appeared at headquarters with the powelither contents. headquarters with the news'that an agent of the confederate treasury was at the place where the bank was then located with place where the bank was then located with orders to seize the $700,000 for the military uses of the confederate government. Governor Harris obtained a telegraphic order for the agent to suspend operations temporarily. He then took the next train for Richmond, where he called upon President Jefferson Davis.

Governor Harris told the president of the confederacy that he well understood the financial necessities of the confederate government and would freely give all of his own personal property to the government. That $700,000, however, belonged to the school fund of the state of Tennessee, and he did not propose to have one cent of it he did not propose to have one cent of it touched if he could help it. As an outcome of this vigorous stand on the part of Gov-ernor Harris, President Davis directed that the state fund should not be disturbed. the state fund should not be disturbed.

After the surrecder Governor Harris went to the Union general in command and obtained a safe conduct and an escort for the conveyance of the money from Griffin, Ga., back to Nashville. The money was taken to the state capital and deposited in a committee room, a receipt being given for the amount. The bags and kegs were broken open and the money lay in heaps on the floor under guard of a file of soldiers until the legislative committee counted the cash ten days later. A remarkably small shortage was found, considering the circumstances during the ten days the money was lying loose on the floor.

course of a few months the Boston man went into bankruptcy.

Established a Musket Cap Factory. Every musket cap used in the first battle of Bull Run was placed in the hands of the confederate soldiers through the energy of Gov. Harris. It came about in this way: On making inquiry he was surprised to find that there was not a musket cap in all the state of Tennessee. Immediately he telegraphed to the war office at Richmond to know if a supply of musket caps could to know if a supply of musket caps could be had for his troops. The answer came that they could not; the war office was not prepared to supply any troops with musket caps. Application was then made to one governor after another in the south, until the entire field was ransacked for musket caps, but none could be found. There was nothing to so but to establish a cap factory, and this Gov. Harris did. With some difficulty he found artisans capable of undifficulty he found artisans capable of un-dertaking the work, and a factory was equipped and the work of turning out musket caps begun. As fast as possible the facilities of the factory were increased; night and day shifts were used, so that the work went on without cessation. It was the only cap factory at the time in the whole confederacy, and from this factory, located in Nashville, Tenn., the army of northern Virginia was supplied with all the musket caps used in the first battle of PERILOUS RIDE OF RUNAWAY GIRLS. Jumped on the Pilot of a Moving Engine and Rode Twenty Miles.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. In order to get away from home, Grace year-old Nebraska City girls, sprang upon the pilot of the engine pulling the Nebraska limited express the other day and rode gayly into Omaha. The quick work was necessary to avoid their parents, and the passengers were treated to the spectacle of the young girls making the daring leap as the wheels of the locomotive began to revolve. The train soon gained a high rate of speed, and with their teeth set and long hair flying in the air the girls clung to the stanchions of the pilot. The engineer was not aware of the girls' perilous position until they made the next stop twenty miles north. Then they were put in one of the passenger coaches and taken to Omaha. They were not disturbed over their exciting ride, but rather appeared to enjoy the extraordinary adventure. They are now being detained at the police station until relatives can be communicated with.

THE LAST SAD RITES

Funeral Services Over the remains of Senator Harris.

at the Exercises.

Through the long watches of the night the body of Senator Harris lay in the marble room of the Senate last night, uncer guard of a file of the Capitol police. This morning the casket containing the remains was opened, and for an hour or more the sorrowing friends of the great Tennessee commoner filed through the room to take a last look at the face of the man whom in life they had regarded with affection and esteem, and whose memory will be cherished and revered in every Ten-
